He focuses his practice on:

- Energy and environmental litigation
- Complex commercial litigation and business torts
- Class action defense
- Antitrust litigation and counseling

Matt has tried numerous cases to verdict around the country involving alleged environmental regulatory violations, business torts, criminal fraud and conspiracy, price fixing, breach of contract, and other complex matters.

His victories include a $17 million jury verdict on behalf of a business unit of Newell Rubbermaid, which sued its former supplier for trade dress infringement, breach of contract, and Lanham Act false advertising. After Matt's closing argument, the jury returned a verdict in Newell's favor on all counts. The case was a double win: Matt also argued the successful motion for summary judgment that disposed of the supplier's $22 million counterclaim.

Matt is lead trial counsel for a public utility in a Clean Air Act enforcement matter brought by the U.S. Department of Justice, with over $3 billion at stake. He successfully defended a similar CAA citizen enforcement action seeking over $2 billion in relief, achieving a settlement for nuisance value.

He also represented former Hollinger International General Counsel Mark Kipnis in the highly publicized Conrad Black criminal fraud case. The ArentFox Schiff trial team won an acquittal on nine of 11 counts. The United States Supreme Court reversed on the remaining two counts, a complete victory for Mr. Kipnis.

In addition, Matt has extensive experience spanning varied subject matters such as fraud, contract, fiduciary duty litigation, patent infringement, government contract bidding disputes, commodity price manipulation, civil rights, employment discrimination, and more.
