Leah is a patent agent who advises clients on IP strategy, with a focus on patent preparation and prosecution. She works on patent applications across a wide range of technologies, with a focus on wearable devices, electronics, medical devices, wireless communications, and software applications. She regularly conducts examiner interviews, coordinates with foreign associates across numerous foreign jurisdictions to facilitate worldwide IP coverage, and works closely with in-house counsel and engineering teams to translate complex systems into strategically aligned IP assets.

Previous Work

Prior to joining ArentFox Schiff, Leah developed significant experience in domestic and international patent preparation and prosecution, as well as patent portfolio development and management. She has assisted attorneys with the preparation and prosecution of patent applications and developed detailed strategies for responding to communications from the USPTO and international patent offices.
