Hayley Sandoval is an associate in the Litigation group in the New York office, where she focuses on complex litigation matters. She brings a strong foundation in legal research and writing, honed through her experience as Managing Editor of the Cardozo Law Review, her judicial internship in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, and her clinical work in immigration law. Hayley is a dedicated advocate who combines analytical rigor with a client-centered approach to help navigate challenging disputes.

Previous Work

Prior to joining ArentFox Schiff as an associate, Hayley worked as a Summer Associate at the firm, gaining firsthand exposure to ArentFox Schiff's practice and client base.

During law school, Hayley served as Managing Editor of the Cardozo Law Review, where she oversaw editorial operations and managed a team of staff editors. She also spent two years as an Advanced Clinical Student and Law Student Intern at the Kathryn O. Greenberg Immigration Justice Clinic, working directly with clients and gaining hands-on experience in both immigration court and federal court. Hayley also interned for a federal judge in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, where she developed critical research and analytical skills in a high-volume trial court.

Before law school, Hayley worked for over two years at an immigration law firm, where she managed cases, conducted one-on-one client meetings in English and Spanish, drafted legal briefs, and compiled voluminous submissions to federal agencies and immigration court. She also served as a Legislative Intern for former United States Senator Robert P. Casey, Jr. and as Communications Intern at the Democratic Attorneys General Association.
